Gender, Justice, and Affective Labor under Conservation & Development on Honduras’ North Coast and Islands

Whose rights are protected in the context of conservation and development?

This talk traces the development of an anthropological praxis as a feminist political ecologist focused on social and environmental justice. Taking a retrospective lens, the presentation explores connections between then and now – undergraduate training at Delaware to current work on multispecies conservation voluntourism. The presentation will include snapshots from two decades of research in Central America, with an emphasis on the relationship between indigeneity, territorial rights, and protected area management.

May 6, 2019
3:30pm – 4:45pm
Sharp Lab, Room 103