Virtual visit with Dr. Jason De León, author of The Land of Open Graves and MacArthur Award winner. Visit will include Q&A.

- Hosting the Hostile Terrain 94 installation, in partnership with the Undocumented Migration Project. This project asks volunteers to help fill in some 3,200 forensic toe tags with the information about people who have died attempting to cross the US-Mexico border. UD will host two virtual tag filling sessions for people who are interested in being part of this memorialization. The tags will be displayed on a map of the border, corresponding to where the remains were found, and eventually displayed as part of the Bordering installation. Volunteers will have the opportunity to have their involvement noted as part of the installation.

- Interviews with migrants (first or second generation) of any background in Delaware. These interviews are a space for migrants to reflect on US border policies, and their own experiences of bordering within Delaware. All interviews will be anonymized. Excerpts from interviews will be included in the Bordering installation, with consent. If you are interested in being interviewed for this project, please contact Dr. Georgina Ramsay at gramsay@udel.edu

[This project has been given IRB exemption from the UD IRB, project number 1576399-1]

Since 1994, the United States Border Patrol has enforced the immigration enforcement strategy Prevention Through Deterrence. The policy forced migrants to take dangerous migration routes, through remote desert and mountain areas, where lives would be at risk. In theory, the policy sought to discourage migrants from crossing the border at all. In reality, millions of people have attempted to migrate through the Sonoran desert, and other points of remote entry.

The University of Delaware project, Bordering, seeks to bring attention to the violence that occurs at and across the physical edges of US borders as well as the more subtle, but nonetheless painful, experiences of border-ing that occur within the US, including Delaware. The Bordering project comprises two parts, which will culminate together in a public installation to be held in 2021. These include:
